2024 Inductees

MELVIN B. MILLER

For more than five decades, Melvin Miller used his voice to dive deeper into issues ranging from politics, social justice, and economic development that have local and national impact. He was the founder, publisher, and editor of the Bay State Banner for 57 years. A weekly newspaper advocating for the interests of Greater Boston's African American community, The Banner has meticulously told the stories of the minority community – stories often overlooked in mainstream media.

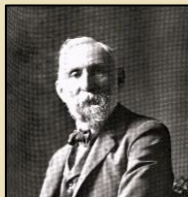

GEORGE BRENNAN

George Brennan retired from newspaper work at the end of 2022 with a long legacy of dogged accountability reporting, fearless crime reporting, sharp editorials, strong management, patient mentoring, and a litany of awards both personally and for the papers he captained. George devoted 35 years to the pursuit of journalism and excelled at effectively holding public officials accountable, reporting on major crimes, and inspiring and mentoring young journalists.

DAVID BROOKS

Long before the term “engagement” became central to the future of local news organizations, David Brooks was busy “engaging” with his readers across many platforms. This intimate connection has included print, websites, blogs, newsletters, podcasts, radio, and live events. He’s been doing it in New Hampshire for more than 35 years, and as technology evolves, the list grows. At the center of it all is the expert reporting that’s made him among the most trusted voices in the state. To those in the newsroom, David is the fountain of information who takes young reporters under his wing.

FRANK DINGLEY

From the start of the Civil War to the end of the First World War, one man stood as the giant of Maine journalism: Frank Dingley, editor of the Lewiston Evening Journal, in its heyday one of the best and most innovative dailies in the country. Dingley mentored some of America's finest journalists along the way and grabbed some astonishing scoops of his own, including a firsthand account of the sinking of the Titanic from a former Lewiston resident he tracked down within hours of her arrival in New York City.
